FORECAST

The slightly föhny changeable southerly current over the Alps will increasingly weaken, as the differences of air-pressure between the high over East Europe and the low-pressure activity over West Europe will decrease. The high over East Europe will withdraw, a further ridge will approach from the Atlantic during the week. Significant changes in weather are not expected, the mostly calm and settled autumn weather will continue until the weekend. As the wind will slowly turn northward, the temperatures will slightly decrease throughout the upcoming days, the temperatures will approach seasonal values. A real onset of cold air may occur next week.
